

Reading and Writing Asian American Stories

We invite you to join Professor Jennifer Lee this semester for a literature-focused writing workshop directed towards Asian American students. Students will have space to connect with peers with similar lived experiences, read the writers and texts that reflect their identities, and write through their reflections in a safe and supportive space. We will read excerpts and short pieces from various contemporary works, reflect, discuss, and write responses to these readings. There will be opportunities and support to create original works. Discussions will also include topics related to Asian American identity and the importance and impact of representation in literature. Most importantly, we will enjoy the captivating writings of a diverse group of talented Asian American authors whose works you may not have read before. No prior experience with Asian American authors is expected. We look forward to having you be part of this community!

When: Every other Thursday from 12:30-2:30 pm on the following dates: 2/10, 2/24, 3/10, 3/24, 4/7, 4/21
